Who can apply

The Summer Institute is addressed mainly to graduate and PhD students in social sciences (economics, sociology, political science, etc.)

Program structure

The Summer Institute will consist of three blocks of activities

1. Morning lectures from leading researchers addressing the most recent advances in the area. Presentations will be given by leading researchers in the field.

2 Hands on sessions in the afternoon.

Provide students a thorough presentation of the survey data on ageing available to the scientific community.

3. Poster sessions and revolving conversations

Students are invited to prepare a poster about their ongoing research: a paper they are working on or one they have already published.

In dedicated slots participants will be asked to present to a fellow student – sitting opposite to her - a research paper they are working on or one they have already published.
